Nestlé Toll House is unveiling its 2015 seasonal baking trends to help home bakers discover creative new recipes and inventive ways to use its variety of baking products. Demographic trends such as an increase in multicultural families and smaller households are influencing how America bakes. With more self-taught and culinary adventurous consumers, baking has evolved to include ingredient-driven sophistication, more baking customization, and personal interpretation of classics.

A leader in baking for more than 75 years, Nestlé Toll House is participating in this shift by inspiring consumers of all skill levels with new ways to use its variety of quality baking products. This year, Nestlé Toll House partnered with esteemed pastry chefs from around the country to define key trends for the 2015 baking season.

Led by Lucien Vendôme, these baking masterminds identified three core trends that will drive this year's baking season :

With access to farmers markets year round, there are plenty of options for creating desserts with a distinct seasonal flavor. Award-winning pastry chef, Michael Laiskonis, inspires creativity with an Autumn-themed recipe that celebrates harvest flavors 'The Autumn-Harvest Cookie Collection'.

- Tradition Reinvented :

Multicultural families are on the rise and with this demographic makeover in the U.S., home bakers are connecting with their heritage by updating treasured desserts. 'Secrets of Baking' Author, Sherry Yard, gives classic sugar cookies an ethnic twist with her recipe for Alfajores.
